Of course, in the Northern belt of the country, the grand Ramleelas are quite popular, and on the day May the Lord always bless you with wisdom and good health. This Dussehra, may you and your family enjoy decorations. Owls are an icon for popular culture warriors, particularly as decorations. These birds evoke a sense of mystery and wisdom, but Turner’s owls also are small charmers. “It’s fun to have this collectible art around, and many want to own their owls to pass down as heirlooms,” she says. New ideas are always on the horizon, and Turner tends to outdo herself. “I think after each show I say, ‘I can’t believe this was the best one ever! This is going to be the biggest and best yet!’”

Popular storytelling wisdom is that you should show rather than tell. The 1950s, for example, were a popular era for children’s TV shows. Many of those vintage programs were stunningly effective for that reason. “It’s a perfectly fine strategy for kids,” says Turner. “You can tell them all the rules, but it’s much more effective when they see the show. This is how I explain it to young writers. If you make them smile by appreciating how funny it is, they’re much more likely to look closer.”

Rituals Cosmetics was born 21 years ago and aimed to change the mundane every day and inject more meaningful rituals into people’s lives. “That’s just the way I think of the world,” says Turner. “We all need to be reminded of the magic in our everyday lives.”

The ancient wisdom of Aotearoa is replicated in the brand’s vintage-style packaging. When customers purchase an Aotea product they also get a vintage-style chronicle that outlines some of the ancestors and kaitiaki (guardians) who have contributed to the journey of the product. “I’m a big believer that you can’t go back in time, but you can take a journey,” says Turner. “We want our customers to feel as though they’re on a journey with us.”

Panorama Gardens, the sister brand of Rituals Cosmetics, was launched in 2019 and also aims to change the mundane every day. “We believe that there is magic in everything,” says Turner. “We want people to feel as though they’re on a journey with us.”
